1. Introduction

This manual describes the printing of invoices from BuzzCoverly.

2. What invoice will you get?

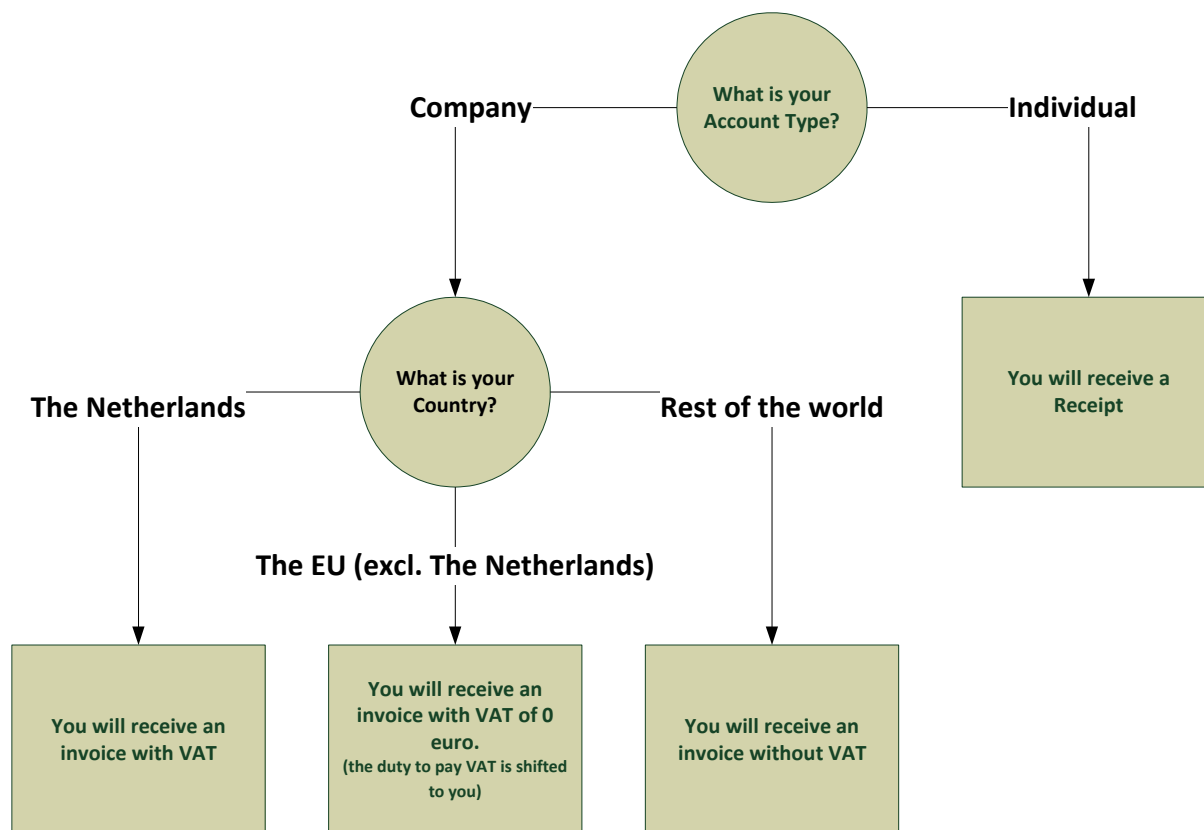

2.1 What properties will determine the invoice

The type of a new invoice depends on the Country selected in the user account and the Account Type. Country and Account Type are copied into invoice from the user account when the invoice is created. This way, previous invoices do not change when Country or Account Type are changed in the account.

The country is selected upon registration. At the same time, BuzzCoverly does not ask for a company information and all user accounts are created as individual by default. The Account Type has to be changed manually and company details have to be provided if invoices have to be received instead of receipts.

Unlike a receipt, an invoice includes Company name, CoC number and VAT number. Three types on invoices differ on how VAT is treated. Total amount of an invoice does not depend on invoice type. It depends on subscription type only.

See the schema below for the steps that determine the invoice that will be created.

2.2 Explanation of the invoices

2.2.1 Information on the invoice

Your invoice contains the following information.

Invoice number	The unique number of your invoice which is dated by year.
Invoice date	The date of payment. This also the start of the subscription period.
Invoice total amount	This is the price for 1 month subscription.
Other invoice details	Information like person name, phone number, email, address, zip code, city, country, company name (if applicable), CoC and VAT numbers (if applicable) are taken from your user account.

Existing invoices cannot be changed. The user can only change details in the account and after that the details will be used in the new invoices.
